Stages are carried out starting from problem identification, screening, quality assessment, data analysis using IMRad and writing data analysis results. The results showed that the implementation of personal hygiene of students in the boarding school environment is still not good, this is evidenced by the fact that there are still many students who experience scabies and flour albus pathology (vaginal discharge) in female students because of the lack of awareness of students about personal hygiene. It is recommended for boarding school managers to hold a knowledge education about the importance of personal hygiene in collaboration with parties in the health sector.*
